AutoCAD uses a point-and-click interface, which is heavily dependent on the use of toolbars. Toolbars are displayed along the sides and bottom of the work area and can be dragged to where they are needed. AutoCAD also features the ability to place objects in 3D space. The drawing space is a window where the 3D perspective is shown to the user. The drawing space can be magnified or reduced. Unlike in some CAD programs that have been released since the release of AutoCAD, in AutoCAD a user must define the most important parts of the drawing area (object bounds) and always see the desired drawing area in a specific perspective view. AutoCAD has been supported by the AutoCAD User Groups for 25 years.
