1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of light emitting semiconductor devices, and more particularly to a method for forming a light emitting diode device having a highly conductive buffer layer.

2. Description of the Related Art The development of light emitting diodes (LEDs) has grown more rapid and expedited over the last few years. As the demand for LED technology increases, fabrication of LEDs demands effective, efficient and cost-effective, methods and structures for the production of LEDs. Typically, LEDs are formed on a semiconductor material wafer using a process comprising a diffusion, epitaxial, and/or impurity-doping step. An LED device such as a packaged LED device is then formed from the semiconductor material wafer. LEDs have many potential applications. For example, LEDs may be used in light sources for homes, offices, and factories, and more particularly as an alternative light source to incandescent and fluorescent lights. Due to their long life, low power consumption, and small size, LEDs find widespread applications in the traffic lights, backlight modules, large panel displays, and so on. In the past few years, with the constantly growing demand for LEDs, the light emitting efficiency and brightness of LEDs have also been improved. Consequently, LEDs have been widely used in various applications in the household and the industrial fields.

Trump fired Comey last week as director of the FBI, a decision that came amid an FBI investigation into whether Trump’s campaign colluded with the Russian government to sway the 2016 election. “A combination of factors led to his dismissal,” the White House said in a statement. “The Administration is conducting a thorough, objective and fair investigation.” A spokesman for Comey’s office told The Hill that the FBI director will not be making any public comments on the matter. In addition to the two sources cited in the media, other names reportedly under consideration for FBI chief include former Attorney General Michael Mukasey and Assistant Attorney General Mary McCord. McCord has previously served as the acting FBI director.
