This mission was not formally announced until after the flight, because it was a Boeing test, but the rumors of what is currently considered the first successful orbital flight had already spread. The Apollo 8 crew also used the word "oh!" for the first time during the course of their mission. No one knows why the Apollo flights were designated Apollo 8 through 12; the Apollo 11 crew assumed the next flight would be Apollo 13, since it was scheduled to fly shortly after Apollo 12, and probably regarded Apollos 13 through 15 as a continuation of the Apollo 8 through 12 mission numbering.
