However, one of the most common attacks these days is the spear phishing scam. A spear phishing attack works when a malicious actor sends an email that purports to be from a reputable source, such as your financial institution or hotel booking service. What happens is that the malicious actor will leverage the trust in the email to trick the receiver into giving up confidential information. Of course, since you, the unsuspecting computer user, is inclined to believe the email, you may accidentally hand the malicious actor your login information. It's a very well-worn scam, but it still persists. Consequently, it's important to be on your guard against such attacks. In this tutorial, we'll teach you how to guard against spear phishing attacks when using your computer. We'll also explain how to recover quickly in case anything goes wrong.
