The first column contains the command name and the second column contains a data grid that is generated dynamically based on the commands. I have many commands and they all have a different data model (so when they are initially typed and get assigned to a command they are displayed in a different form) Here is a picture to maybe make it more clearer So I have a table with 2 columns. The first column is the command name, the second column is the data grid that is dynamically generated based on the command name. The issue I am having is that I am stuck with the table because I do not know how to hide the top data grid if another command is typed. Is there an easy way to do this? EDIT: I was trying to make it easy. So in reality I would have a long table and each column would represent a command (9df0af710a
