Q: Is there a reason not to learn Chinese in Korea? My boyfriend and I are thinking of starting to learn Chinese. We plan on going to Korea and learning the language there. My question is, would it be better to learn the language at home, or go to Korea to start learning? What we don't want to do is have to learn "Chinese" on Korean, since that is not how it is spoken. A: Korean language itself is quite hard. Both Chinese and English are easier to learn than Korean for a lot of people. It's very hard to get Chinese and Korean to agree on the same word. There is a level of Korean that is very different from the Chinese language, which makes it difficult to learn at first, especially for English speakers. You might even end up speaking a kind of simplified Korean, but it is a lot harder to do that. So, if you learn Chinese in Korea, you'll need to learn Korean on your own. You have to know that Korean is not really the same as Chinese. It is not the same as the Beijing dialect of Chinese. It is closer to the Hakko dialect in Tokyo. I think it is a good idea to learn Chinese, not only for the sake of the cultural aspect, but also to learn another language. A: I am currently teaching Chinese to Korean students on the web. I think the best thing to do is to go to China and teach for a semester there. Then you will be able to understand why certain things don't make sense in Korean, and will gain a lot of confidence in your own language abilities. A: I am Korean and the first language I learned was English. I didn't learn Chinese after that. Learning Chinese in Korea may be a good idea but I think there are lots of Chinese learners in Korea. I can't imagine learning Chinese in Korea is a smooth and easy thing. Personally I think you should take the Chinese online if you are just beginning and if you want to do that in Korea, I think you should study at Seoul National University in
