I know this is an entirely New Zealand topic so forgive me, but this happens a lot to me as a South African / Zimbabwean English speaker too. I am very self conscious of my English and I feel like it can be a bit cringy if I'm in a formal situation, the English I do speak is pretty lazy and less correct if compared with my best work (eg any copy work and academic English in my days at University). For someone else, I know the situation is different but for me, it just comes across as this very shy awkward expression that I personally abhor. Kind of like laughing like you're in pain! Do you know how to be confident in a situation like that? And what about being confident in your own English to be honest? Thanks!

the duodenal bulb. (b) A small localized tumor is present in the duodenal bulb (SCTD). (c) The capsule opening is adjacent to the duodenal bulb (*).
