I was only mildly interested because it was a national organization (long story) and I thought it would lead to a long, slow-moving relationship. Four years ago, I got a phone call and I was no longer that mildly interested. This time he called a little closer to Christmas and I said I would be more interested. I wanted to get to know him and see if we liked each other. After a couple of years, he told me he needed a partner. I was surprised because his wife was an ambitious, active, career-minded woman. Instead, it turned out to be a business associate. A person in the same industry and business, but not her husband's manager. This was no fancy job either. I'm a personal financial advisor. I worked hard to save up my money and invest it so I could buy a house and become a realtor. I was an assistant branch manager for a bank and I was paid fairly well. And now I took less money to go into partnership with this person. He was also wealthy and my client base was his client base. I had essentially been watching this company grow. I've been working with this company for 2 years now and they have an office in my city. They're expanding nationwide. He said I did everything I needed to and that he didn't need me to. I suppose he needed someone to be in charge of bookkeeping, answering the phone and doing some of
