When compiling it, I get the error: non-type template argument of a template parameter cannot be the type of a template parameter The error is in the template Foo, but how come there is no problem in the template Bar and we can just define an int in the constructor of a Bar object? My test class: #include class Foo { public: Foo(){} }; class Bar { public:

    Bar(int i){ std::cout < class FooImpl { public:
    FooImpl() { std::cout < class BarImpl { public:
    BarImpl(T i) { std::cout > f; // this is OK Bar b(1); //
    this is OK e79caf774b
