Anki is designed to be used for quickly and easily creating helpful flashcards to teach yourself and other people about new words, things, places, people, jobs, or ideas that you want to study. What it does Make flashcards to study new things Flashcards are collections of information that can be stored inside a single deck of a personal information manager. Each card contains text and can be formatted as text, audio, or video. You can use your own flashcards to organize your study materials and you can even attach resources to your cards for reference purposes. Add questions to your flashcards With Anki, you can organize your flashcards into decks and create your own decks. Also, you can quickly create questions and collect responses to your flashcards. A question is a statement you want to know the correct answer to. And when you collect enough responses to your question, you can easily learn the answer to that question and add it to your deck. Mark your cards Every time you study a question, click the "accept" button to mark that question as solved. This helps you see quickly if you have mastered the material and can click the "next" button to review the next card. Create, export, and plicets from Anki export feature to convert your sets of flashcards to other formats and use it on other computers.
