those with positive results for the detection of C. difficile DNA by PCR (38 out of 45 patients), found that in 40% of the patients who displayed this marker, C. difficile culture grew only in one or both fecal samples, whereas in 16% of the patients, fecal samples that were both culture positive for C. difficile DNA and displayed a positive PCR assay yielded no growth in culture. Our study shows that the concurrent excretion of C. difficile DNA and C. difficile toxins in patients with CDI and in healthy controls cannot be considered as a useful tool for diagnosing CDI, since none of the patients with positive ELISA testing for C. difficile toxins and negative culture grew C. difficile in the fecal samples. A similar result was obtained by Furuta et al. ([@B22]) who investigated C. difficile infection in elderly Japanese patients with diarrhea and demonstrated that in these patients, the combination of the assays for the detection of C.

C. difficile* in the feces and blood was most helpful in the diagnosis of CDI. In that study, serum C. difficile*-toxin ELISA in patients with CDI had a sensitivity of 100% and a negative predictive value of 99.9%. Thus, combined assays for the detection of C. difficile* DNA and toxins in feces or blood yielded a better sensitivity than any of these assays alone. However, a recent study conducted at Emory University in Atlanta (USA) using a larger series of 90 patients with a diagnosis of CDI showed that despite the high specificity of the ELISA for detecting anti-t
