Conclusion {#S5} ===== In summary, this meta-analysis provides strong evidence that the rs1801133 TNF polymorphism can be used as a DNA-based marker of an increased risk for AMD in cases of Asian populations. These findings also provide a further understanding of the biological mechanism of the TNF gene. However, due to the limited number of studies included in the meta-analysis, the results obtained need to be confirmed by more well-designed studies in the future. Moreover, further investigations are needed to identify the potential pathways involved in AMD pathogenesis, as well as the molecular basis of the protective effect of the TNF gene. Data Availability Statement {#S6} ===== All datasets generated for this study are included in the article/Supplementary Material{ref-type="supplementary-material"}. Author Contributions {#S7} ===== SP, XL, and RY contributed to the design of the study, performed the data extraction, and drafted the manuscript. C-HZ and J-YG performed the data extraction and statistical analyses. All authors made contributions to the article and approved the submitted version. Try refreshing your browser, or Child murderer Armani Anderson sentenced to life in prison, but doesn't have to face second-degree murder charges Back to video The Supreme Court of Canada outlined the reasons for its decision in a brief obituary published earlier this week, saying Anderson killed twin boys, who were two months shy of their first birthday, in a violent, random attack in June 2009. “Their tiny bodies were found in the backyard of her home, each one wrapped in a different coloured blanket. The youngest child was dead for several hours before he was discovered,” the obituary said. Anderson initially told police she buried the twins in her backyard because her neighbours kept making noise by jumping on her trampoline. She later said she killed them because she was angry at her husband for leaving her.
