With multiple technical improvements, improved play stability, increased ball control, enhanced movement and more chances of scoring, FIFA 22 truly opens up the dynamic gameplay of each player on the pitch. In addition, FIFA's new "Tactical Shot" tool can help coaches control the positioning of defenders on the pitch during gameplay. FIFA 22 allows each player on the pitch to reach and strike the ball from all locations on the pitch with improved precision. Every player is equipped with the tools they need to use their unique style of play and trigger moves to perfection. Reflections can now be used in gameplay, and players can position themselves between two players to run down a pass, intercept a pass or make a great tackle. "We often hear people ask 'what kind of technology is used in the making of this game?', and it's our mission to make those differences visible for the millions of FIFA fans around the world. The process that we use to add a new animation or technology to FIFA is never new technology. We review how the technology performs during play testing and design with it in mind. We then create a unique AI playstyle around it, and design a gameplay feature around it, in a pitch like setting and use the systems we created to simulate it in the game. So when players hear that question 'what kind of technology is used to make this game?' and I say that we have used our game design principles, the gameplay experience we design for, the teams we design with and the tools we use to make sure it is fun and challenging for each player on the pitch," says Creative Director for FIFA, David Rutter. "With "HyperMotion Technology" we can make sure that all movements can be made from any position on the pitch. If the player has the ball, they can perform the exact moves they need to score and move the ball to its next destination. When they don't have the ball and they are standing still, or running backwards or forwards and away from danger they can block or tackle to slow the opponent and avoid danger. We believe that this is the ultimate freedom in the next generation of FIFA." Over the last year, we have been able to put these in to practice on all our products. The ultimate evolution of our EA SPORTS Football franchises will be on a scale never seen before.”

says EA Sports Global Executive Producer Karl Stewart.
