“This is the next step for the FIFA franchise,” said Maxis Lead Engineer Adam Sessler. “It will move FIFA towards an authentic, true-to-life football experience while also offering players the most satisfying, realistic gameplay yet.” Four things to note: Epic team-made movies for all FIFA 2022 kits... get hyped. FIFA 22 introduces "Skill Stick," a new control feature, which tracks a player's movements in mid-air when performing aerials, shots, headers, etc. and then replays those moves in slow motion. This enables players to make moves as if they are in reality. The "cinematic" cutscenes, in which players can take a wide variety of actions with their feet and run and jump to create space and work towards their opponent's goal, give players a variety of moves and a sense of movement with their feet that is unprecedented in the FIFA series. The equivalent of a real-world football match is simulated in the new "Gameplay Pod" feature. Players can put on the new Pro-Spec Performance Kit and run through the training fields to hone their movement and control skills. The Pro-Spec Performance Kit comes with six different shoes. These include the Pro-Spec Speed, Pro-Spec Control, Pro-Spec Rush, Pro-Spec Tricking, Pro-Spec Dynamic and Pro-Spec Reactive. New head-tracking technology allows players to see every angle of an opponent's head in real-time. With multiple cameras, players can see every angle of their opponents’ face and head movements, enabling players to see where they are getting their shots off from. We asked Adam Sessler about FIFA’s gameplay philosophy and what it means to him to be the person designing a new FIFA game. FIFA 20 was the most successful game in the franchise’s history. Why did you decide to move to “next-gen”? "FIFA was already a game of the generation, if you remember the first game the “segway of platforms”, which is a reference to a trial on a skateboard, bicycle and Segway. We had new consoles coming out at the same time, and in the middle of working on “FIFA 19” we realized that we still had a lot of issues left to solve with the next generation. We could still improve
