HyperMotion Technology (HMxTM) has been developed by FIFA in collaboration with world-class sports technology partner ESSE, and its objective is to make each match feel unique and evolve in a non-linear way in order to bring a new level of realism to the game. It is used to give the ball unpredictability by making it respond to moves and tackles not seen in previous titles. Click here for a complete list of hypermotion-enabled features in FIFA 22. Established in 1992, ESSE has developed a wide range of solutions for sports video analysis. A leading company in this field, ESSE plays a key role in equipping the world's top sports teams with professional data processing, and is also an integral part of the process of creating the broadcast content seen worldwide. The company's expertise in both sports analysis and the engineering of data processing systems for live broadcasts is reflected in the hypermotion-enabled features used in FIFA 22. Players will also have the freedom to switch between traditional and hypermotion-enabled gameplay options in addition to additional features which will be announced in the near future. Daniel Reljic, Director of Product Development for FIFA, said: "The evolution of football is reflected in the way we make the game every year, and now with hypermotion technology at the heart of our action simulation engine, we're creating a new world of football. Every match will feel unique and evolve in its own non-linear way, and I hope players are excited about what's to come in FIFA 22." Esports. Fnatic is comprised of seven core players: Adil "Scream" Benrud, Dennis "dennis" Edin, Dan "apEX" Madesclaire, Robin "Fiffiaren" Johansson, Christopher "GeT_RiGhT" Alesund, Richard "Xizt" Landström and Jesper "JW" Wecksell. To date, the team has won four ECS titles, two ECS Finals and one ESL One Cologne, and has qualified for the following tournaments: DreamHack Masters Las Vegas 2016, ESL Pro League Season 5 Finals, ECS Season 1 Finals, ECS Season 2 Finals, MLG Columbus 2016, ESL One Cologne 2016 and the Intel Extreme Masters XI World Championship. What's new:

- Establish your turf and the chemistry between the pitch, the player, and the ball as you build a squad from more than 100 real-life Ultimate Team players. New face-offs and corner types, including four-pointers, pack more punch into gameplay.
- FIFA Ultimate Team Pick-and-Play is returning. You now get more freedom in selecting a player to supplement your starting formation, and this is complemented by Pick-and-Traits that introduce new behaviors for all players. As a result, your team will play more like you want, and the opposition will play differently than expected.
- The pitch editor has been restored as a part of FIFA Ultimate Team, enabling you to re-design your own pitches through the new Ball System. Whether you want to convert your pitch to artificial grass or create a running track, the new options in this slider system give you freedom in making your pitch unique.
- A new saving system means going into the game after a long session can help you start-up quicker in the next game session. You can also use a purchased FIFA ID to transfer your saved player data to your next account.
- FIFA Ultimate Team now features UEFA Pro Licence.
- AI tweaks mean the best players have an even greater advantage in Fantasy mode.
- Ultimate Team members from the past in the Community Stadium have now been restored, bringing them back to your benches. They will interact with the players in the game.
- New detailing of player faces and improved hair textures make them look more like you wish. All players with new hair styles will appear in the game with fully refreshed club logos.

FIFA is one of the most recognisable names in sports video games, with over 185 million active players around the world and the title is sold in over 100 countries. FIFA is home to more than a decade of innovation with its 'Powered by Frostbite' engine. The community also created much of the title content that players enjoy now and where World Cup 2018 was built, beginning with the passing of the torch for FIFA 16 to FIFA 19. This year we focus on authentic, high-intensity, football that plays and feels just like the real thing. FIFA 22 delivers the biggest changes to core gameplay since FIFA 17, bringing the game closer to real football. Underpinned by revolutionary goal celebrations and an enriched referee AI, FIFA 22 is an all-encompassing football experience. This year's FIFA World Cup is home to new stadiums and stadia venues across the globe, delivering a diverse range of locations, while the Champions League returns with an all-new European tournament and Fan Verdict, the official global online community, rewards fans, and shows off their best skills and celebrates the major moments of the season in style. EA SPORTS FIFA 22 also delivers a remarkable feature set for a game of this scope, including cross-play on PC, Mac and Xbox One, the ability to start matches from any position on the field, as well as player features that have been enhanced for FIFA and enabled by the Frostbite engine to bring players more closely to their real-life counterparts. How will players feel the differences? We have focused on many core areas of gameplay to create an authentic football experience that feels great and is fun to play. But we can't define in numbers and we can't sum up in bullet points the incredible feature set that FIFA 22 delivers. Here are just a few of the highlights from the game:

- Features designed to improve the experience of the game for the end-game crowd
- In a recent analysis of EA SPORTS FIFA community data, we discovered that players in high-scoring matches usually move with more intensity, and loose possessions between passes less frequently. As a result, passes between players will feel more realistic, leading to more options when running and players will pass more often between the middle and last line. This is backed up by the fact that more passes occur between the defending and offensive phases of matches, again adding to the close-quarter tactics of football.
