Cory Booker's people are getting nervous and grasping for excuses. "We had to keep this race for August in order to beat the fantasy in our own heads, that we were going to make this thing a national contest," said one top Democrat. "If I'm the one that tells a bunch of Democrats that the next poll comes out with [Peters] right behind, we're in a four person race, when it's already a three, that's not going to be received well." The latest poll showed Booker up only 19 points. But they're running with the "polls just don't matter" narrative: "At the end of the day, if you want to look at the first two contests, the Trump-Clinton numbers are looking pretty good. We'll make our own move. But that doesn't mean it's going to go our way." The importance of the first two nominating contests in Iowa and New Hampshire is "fantasy" only if you believe the Democratic establishment will let a candidate like former CIA chief-turned-buzzword-repurposed-by-news-sites-capital-B-ISIS-Steve-Cordes-win the nomination. "We have to win this thing," said another top Democrat. "It's our base and it's a true test of whether this is going to be a contested race. If I'm the one who doesn't get it and we go in with 60 [percent of delegates], we're not going to be a contender in the general." "There was a lot of game-planning going on before these elections," added the third top Democrat. "I don't know if Cory knew he was having as difficult of a time as he is now. But a month ago, this race was going to be a coronation. It was going to be Warren, Biden, and Bernie. That didn't go anywhere." Booker's problem: he's a bit of a grifter. He's taken millions of dollars from corporate donors and he's raised more than $3 million from a real estate developer. He was in Iowa for only eleven days. On what planet is it possible that Booker can win the nomination with less than 2% of the vote? He's not a Democrat. He should be left to wither away on the vine, as his party collapses

Q: How to export GUI elements for testcase? For my C# application (WPF) I have a separate test project. In the test project I create a new WPF user control and set it's properties. How can I export this user control for a testcase (other than using a default testcase template)? A: Assuming you mean WPF application, this is probably not possible. What you can do is create a "set up" test method (using NUnit, for example) that prepares the test project (e.g. assigns the user control to a property, etc) and then after the test case runs, you can have the test method dispose of the user control. your mind, have you no great thoughts there, that at another time you will be utterly incapacitated?" "I believe I have, but I do not think that I will be utterly incapacitated at another time; and I think that perhaps I have only a certain degree of alertness now." "I will not further press the point; but we will examine this matter together hereafter. You are leaving town tomorrow, I think. You do not wish to stay in this town and you do not think yourself fit to bear the rigours of a winter climate? you know very well that a tropical climate would be infinitely better for you. You agree with me that that is the case?" "I know that it is so, but you will see that I am fully able to bear it." "Pardon me for pressing the point; but you do not like to come any distance from home?" "I do not come very far." "When you come to town, you will find me a very jealous guardian of your interests. That is not the case at your home." "At my home, in fact, I am not very much watched over, if you mean that I do not have to account to anyone. I feel that I do." "Well, perhaps not at home, but at my hotel you will find men watching your every movement. You will see them many times; you can attend them if you please." "Why do you torment me about it?" "In order that you shall be fully convinced, and that you shall suffer no shadow of doubt, you shall see them." "I do not understand what you are saying to me." "It shall all come clear to you. You must expect that
