The human cytomegalovirus (HCMV) UL94 gene can be fused to enhanced green fluorescent protein (eGFP) to monitor replication of the HCMV immediate early (IE) antigens and investigate the cellular tropisms of HCMV. However, the instability of HCMV-fusion genes may cause the simultaneous expression of multiple target antigens during viral replication. In this study, K562 cells transfected with a recombinant plasmid HCMV-UL94-eGFP were detected by flow cytometry to detect the expression of HCMV-IE antigens simultaneously. Additionally, polymorphisms in the UL94-eGFP fusion genes of HCMV were determined by Sanger sequencing. The results showed that the expression of green fluorescence did not differ in cells transfected with UL94-eGFP and cells mock transfected with eGFP alone, suggesting that the HCMV-UL94-eGFP fusion gene was stable in K562 cells.
