Making an enticing photo The first thing you need to know about Photoshop is that just about everything you see in an image file in your computer is stored in a raster-based file (created as a raster image), such as a photograph or painting. This is made possible by the type of image-editing program Photoshop uses, which is called a raster graphics editor. A `_raster_` is a bitmapped image, consisting of a pattern of dots that are assigned colors when the file is viewed on a computer monitor or printer. For example, the word `_Washington_` is made of a bunch of dots and letters and other stuff that are all assigned colors when it's printed. Each dot is a `_pixel_`, which is the small element that makes up a screen or printed page. You can't see any dots in a computer screen but you can see the colors. Typically, a

[Use of skin coverings in radiation protection of patients receiving high-energy radiotherapy]. Under the influence of high-energy radiation, particularly in the case of X-ray beams, the skin may be exposed to acute and chronic damage. Skin sores and ulcers may be caused by the exposure to physical effects of X-rays with the use of X-ray machines operating in a broad spectrum. As a result of the radiotherapy, radiation injuries of the skin, as well as of other tissues in the case of use of the linear accelerators, occur more frequently, as compared with X-ray therapy. The use of one or several types of skin covering in such situations is a significant contributor to the prevention of radiation injuries and for the improvement of safety and quality of radiotherapy. The paper presents the modern approaches to the prevention of acute and chronic injuries of the skin of a radiotherapy patient's skin and possible ways of their implementation.a speech has poured hot into the blogosphere, it's time to see what happens to it. even before that happens, it's time to ponder what free speech means, and why it has a right to exist. right now, when outrage is at an all-time high, when outrage is such an important element in the political machinery of the blogosphere, and when it is such an important part of the mainstream media, it's time to consider what free speech actually means, and how it affects us. by that, i mean what free speech means, and what it doesn't, and why we need it. where to start? well, before you can talk about the actual framework of free speech, you need to consider a few things: 1.) in many states, the protections of free speech do not exist. in many states, a person is not protected by free speech in doing something that hurts someone else. many states have anti-discrimination laws in place to prevent specific categories of discrimination, but none to protect against all discrimination. 2.) the war on terror had a big part in convincing many states that free speech does not include demonization of a targeted group, or inciting violence against that group. 3.) some states have laws that say speech that can be construed to be libelous or slanderous against a person is not protected by free speech. 4.) some states have laws that say hate speech is not protected by free speech. 5.) in many states, the protections

Slowly but surely, Russia is bringing back its old cold war buddy: China. As at the time of the Soviet Union and the PRC, there are also apparent joint efforts to shape geopolitics in the Pacific. Meanwhile, the United States' Eurasia policy attempts to keep a foothold in the region but the Trump administration does not seem to know how to proceed. In its latest appearance, Russia and China joined forces to brief the media on a statement that claimed to solve the dispute of the South China Sea. On May 16 and 17, Chinese and Russian representatives called on the media to brief on the joint declaration of Moscow and Beijing. The statement is followed by the delivery of the Chinese government's comments. The joint statement came as a response to the Philippines' rejection of the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) free trade agreement. The three diplomats talked about the development of cooperation in various fields at the joint briefing. They spoke about the trade and economic relations between the two countries and also the Chinese-Russian relations. They also discussed the dispute over the South China Sea. The South China Sea is a major shipping route in Southeast Asia. It is rich in natural resources and is the centerpiece of a new energy supply route for China. The field of competition, however, also includes the South China Sea, Taiwan and other countries. The joint statement is the first cooperation on the dispute between the two countries since the conclusion of the bilateral communiqué. Beijing and Moscow also hoped to ensure the stability of maritime affairs in the region by taking positive steps. According to the joint statement, both sides agreed to respect each other's sovereignty, maintain peace, stability and security in the South China Sea. The two sides also agreed to avoid the militarization of the area and uphold freedom of navigation and overflight and unimpeded lawful economic activities. The joint statement stressed that the two countries would continue to uphold international laws and safeguard regional peace and stability. Also, the two countries vowed to jointly develop the road map for the peaceful settlement of the South China Sea dispute. The statement also noted that both sides agreed to consult on the establishment of a Code of Conduct that will apply to the South China Sea, adding that each side commits to uphold international law and to promote an early and comprehensive settlement of the dispute. The Code of Conduct will cover the application of international law and UNCLOS, the rules regarding freedom of navigation in the South China Sea, the implementation of the Declaration on the Conduct
