Abstract Objective To review the problem, report a case of a patient with recurrent massive hemorrhage from a complicated ovarian cyst, and discuss the management options available. Background Vaginal and cesarean section deliveries may be indicated due to a small pelvis in a patient with a large ovarian cyst. A case of a woman with recurrent massive hemorrhage from a complicated ovarian cyst, managed by a combined procedure of abdomino-perineal resection of the cyst and vaginal repair is presented. Results A giant unilocular cyst was found in a 23-year-old woman, weighing 450 g and measuring 17 cm in diameter. The patient had two previous spontaneous vaginal deliveries and a low transverse incision cesarean section delivery 9 years before. She had a recurrent massive hemorrhage of a 20 cm cyst during the first menstrual period after a full term vaginal delivery. A cystectomy was undertaken.

Conclusion Abdomino-perineal resection of the cyst and a vaginal repair was a more appropriate treatment option for a giant ovarian cyst because, compared to other gynecologic procedures, it provides good cosmetic results, low cost, and no extra risk to the infant. Compaq dx1000 Microtower PC Software - Official HP® Support. Portable terminals having a wireless communication function such as cellular phones have become very popular. Mobile communication terminals and the like that are provided with various functions, such as short message transmission and reception, electronic mail, camera shooting, data file shooting and music file shooting, besides a simple voice call function and that can upload, download, and store a great number of images and music have come into wide use. Further, a functional improvement in portable terminals through a continued diversification and enhancement of the services they provide has been made. With these trends, there is a need to realize on-site viewing of images or music in the same manner as with images or music files stored in recording media, such as DVD, VCD and so forth. A viewing manner using a portable terminal is called as Portable Multimedia Viewing (PMV). Currently, portable terminals and the like that make a phone call or transmit and receive data have mostly employed a camera of a size fitting the outer dimensions of the display area in a viewfinder or main display. However, a mobile camera which is reduced in size, which is capable of taking a photo or a video, which has an automatic focus or an automatic exposure function, or which has a zoom function is now being developed. This kind of camera has a small size and is integrated with the camera section of the portable terminal and is called a camera built-in module (CBM). As the market for digital cameras expands, users find a great variety of them. However, most are large in size, and it is inconvenient to carry them. Further, photographers who have taken pictures only for themselves cannot easily use them, and not many are interested in such pictures. Accordingly, they do not carry them to a photo-viewing facility, or in the case of personal viewing, search for a photo-viewing facility from far away. A solution to the problems is to put a compact camera on a portable terminal. The size of the display area in the viewfinder or main display of a portable terminal is still small, and the resolution is low, but with a development in the technology and an increase in the number of pixels of the display, even a compact camera of a size smaller than that of a cellular phone will have a sufficient display area. A photo image can be
