Whatsapp : Email : [email protected] This may be the longest intro speech ever, and it's all to explain why we're making Maken so retro, why it's not Guilty Gear. Now, I haven't been asked anything directly about Guilty Gear (not in a few years anyway) so I had to come up with something. Basically, I'm showing off what I'm making. I want to prove that I can make this and that I can do it right. Maken is now accessible to more people because of the whole "making" thing, but then the game was meant for me to show this ability off so... This thread is to show people what RetroMak has been doing for the past 5 years, up until yesterday... Such a belabored intro... Anyway, yes, RetroMak is coming to PS4 this summer. But let me just say a word about the port: RetroMak runs very well on PS4. The controls are a bit sloppy, but it's a minor issue when you notice that your sprites are never larger than they should be, they just look a bit blurry when zooming in. Lilac Gameplay Replay We have provided 2 methods (depending on your needs) for you to record gameplay: Smooth Threading and Invia Nero. Smooth Threading lets you record gameplay continuously, with pauses allowed. This is highly recommended for recording slow-paced games in which your perspective switching is fast, since playback will halt any time the game pauses and you have a noticeable delay when resuming the scene afterwards. This is also recommended for smoothing actual playtime, since there will be a minimal interruption to gameplay every time you pause. However, there is a catch. It is nearly impossible to pause gameplay precisely when you need to, so expect some minor inaudible interruptions. Instant Novella records gameplay with minimum pauses, in about 5 second intervals. This is ideal for recording games in which your perspective switches are less frequent, such as stealth games, or when actual gameplay time is more important to you than time spent pausing for the announcer to say, "Pause! Save game!" You can also record gameplay with Invia Nero. Normal playback is smooth and 1080p, but pauses can still be detected. There are two instances when you may not be able to hear a pause. 1) If the video card setting is set to Very High in our scaling menu and 2) if you are using a patch.3 or higher of a library. Although this recording will offer you smooth playback at 1080p, it is surprisingly quite jumpy at 30FPS. The framerate appears to vary greatly and occasionally, there will be almost no frame whatsoever for a period of time. This is caused by a bug in the.
