What's New in the MultiSurf?

MultiSurf is a powerful 3D design application that helps you create a variety of objects. It allows you to create free form curves, surfaces, points, beads, points, snake lines, composites, TriMesh, frames or planes. You can load textures, materials or solid bodies, or import and edit them from a file. Providing medical care and treatment in state psychiatric hospitals, but usually not in psychiatric units, has been a goal of many. Since Indiana's mental health legislation goes back to 1893 and the rise of the asylums, this idea has taken on a life of its own. Mental health care was delivered in the asylums and then in state run mental hospitals. Then after passage of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA '88) in 1984, Mental Health and Substance Abuse Block grants (MHSAB grants) were made available to states that would house "emotionally disturbed adolescents." The new legislation brought mental health home to families, but their children were still locked away. This legislation was meant to be a "cost saving" measure, but it resulted in a $2 billion shortfall in the state coffers, so Medicaid dollars and federal dollars were put into the state budget and used to pay for foster care and substance abuse services to help these children. HB 1881 granted much of the same benefits as the MHSAB grants but it was not complete. Then in 1998, the general assembly and governor passed what would be known as the Psychological Service System or Presser II Reform. The intent was to develop a separate, integrated system of mental health services that could meet the needs of those people with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD). The Presser II system (Figure 1) included four components, ambulatory treatment (SAP), crisis services (CRR), early intervention (DI), and supported living and community services (JSC). The Presser II system is mandated to be provided in the least restrictive setting available and includes mental health treatment, independent living, and vocational and social supports. There is a financial priority attached to this reform, as the failure to provide it would "cause a great risk to the health and well being of the clients in these programs, and the need for their services would be increased by as much as three to one or even five to one." The Presser II system was also to integrate services, to provide "a minimum of common standards and practices" and to utilize the newest technology to ensure the "effective service delivery".
