Although much of Photoshop is straightforward and intuitive, some of its built-in tools and functions can be a little intimidating to beginners, especially if they're used to simpler programs like Microsoft Paint. This section introduces some of the more important terms and concepts you'll encounter during a Photoshop tutorial. ## Layers The cornerstone of Photoshop is the layer. Each layer is represented in the _Layers panel_ (Figure 2-1, left) as a thumbnail. Layers are stacked over each other, like cards in a deck, and you can move and manipulate them at will. To best understand layers, think of them as containers for an image's components. These components can be anything from a single color to multiple objects, such as text, shapes, or even movie clips and sound effects. Layers can also be grouped, which is a useful concept for photographers. If you apply the same adjustment to a group of layers, only one layer needs to be changed. You'll see how this works in a moment.

Q: How does one calculate growth rates in the presence of autocorrelation? I have stumbled upon this graph from academic reference (figure 1.2, page 18): The annual growth rate is 6.67%, but I don't understand where the data comes from. Assuming he is calculating it based on the annual value, I get 6.33%, i.e. -3.33% due to autocorrelation of growths. How can I calculate the growth rate? The figure is only available in the journal article, and is not linked to any external source that I can see. A: The annual growth rate is 6.67%, but I don't understand where the data comes from. Assuming he is calculating it based on the annual value, I get 6.33%, i.e. -3.33% due to autocorrelation of growths. He is most likely using an average of the growth rates. A noise level analysis of standard right ventricular lead placement in a canine model for implantable cardioverter defibrillator. This study was designed to estimate the degree of crosstalk between a right ventricular defibrillation lead and an implantable cardioverter defibrillator by evaluation of their noise levels. Noise levels induced by a crosstalk between a standard defibrillation lead and an implantable cardioverter defibrillator were measured in a canine model for cardiac resynchronization therapy defibrillator (Dokita et al., 2002). The lead-defibrillator noise was analyzed for 1 kHz and 0.3 kHz noise components by use of a 1.6-mV/50-mV electrode. The noise level induced by the standard defibrillation lead placed just posteriorly to the high-voltage end of the implantable cardioverter defibrillator was 0.5 microVrms in the 1-kHz component and 0.3 microVrms in the 0.3-kHz component. The level of high-voltage component noise is not a clinically significant cause of tachyarrhythmia. No crosstalk was detected between the defibrillation lead and the implantable cardioverter defibrillator. the three of us we couldn't have put together a better organization than we had."
