Q: Does SVN allow to export part of the working copy to a new repository? Sometimes, I have a scenario where I need to export a sub-folder with the current revision to a new repository. I know I can export just the folder to the archive, but doing so only forces the revision to the archive. For example, say I have a trunk, and I have my working copy of it in my c:\svn\trunk\ folder, I can run something like this: svnadmin dump c:\svn\trunk -r 1057 > c:\svn\trunk\tags\1057.svnadmin.svnadmin But the commit will still go to the repository. What I would like to be able to do, is export the working copy to a new repository and have the commit happen, but not to the original repository. Is this possible? A: You have a few options. Existing Subversion repositories You could define a new repository in your existing repository using the SVN Book to define the new repository. Take note that this is not required. You can simply follow the command line instructions, using svnadmin create, and point your working copy to a copy of the new repository. Either way, once you define the new repository, you can start using it. If you want to use the new repository as a new working copy, you need to add this new repository to the working copy by adding it to the.svn file as a URL. You are correct that doing so with the svnadmin dump command has the commit happen to the new repository. This is fine, as long as you are happy with the contents of your new repository. Otherwise, you can simply perform a svn switch --relocate to get your working copy into the new repository. Using a different Subversion repository You can perform the export in your original repository, but simply store the results in a different location, and reference the location when you perform the commit in your new repository. Importing to a different repository is a bit more involved. You could either: Switch to a local working copy of the new repository, and then perform the import with svn import or svnadmin import. The resulting set of files will be added to the working copy. (This is also supported via svn switch --relocate.) Perform

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a rotary carrier member with a removable cap for a feeding apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art Rotary carriers are known, for example, from WO-A 99/28301 or DE-C 195 40 516. For feeding apparatus, it is known from EP-A 590 709 to connect a rotary carrier to the feeding apparatus through a removable hinge with retaining elements. The feeding apparatus consists of a driving element, a hollow cylindrical receiving element that can be set into rotation and containing an axially projecting pin, and a cylindrical coupling element that is set into rotation by the feeding apparatus and has a corresponding helical groove with a projection. These parts can be connected via their respective retaining elements to the corresponding parts of another of the same kind, for example of the next above-mentioned rotary carrier. It is thereby possible to fasten two rotary carriers to one another. It has been found that rotation of the rotary carrier in the feeding apparatus is not entirely smooth, particularly when the rotary carrier is made of a plastic material with a relatively high coefficient of friction. This can occur, for example, when a rotary carrier is made from plastic material and is removed from a circular-cylinder-shaped feeder that has a relatively large diameter but a small thickness. In such case, the rotary carrier can move so far axially from the bottom of the circular-cylinder-shaped feeder that the retaining element that is connected to the rotary carrier does not completely close the rotationally attached feeder. Accordingly, there exists a need for a rotary carrier having a removable cap that addresses these and other deficiencies of the prior art.Q: Converting dataframe to column and column into dataframe I have a dataframe that looks like this: df = pd.DataFrame({'id': ['A', 'B', 'A', 'A'], 'lat': [4.53, 42.53, 43.53, 0], 'lon': [-34.93, -98.93, -33.53, -34.93], 'z': [10, 10, 20, 0]}) Now I want to make all the lat and lon columns into an array, which I can
