How to list and import backup files into folders in Windows 7 and Windows 8? Backup files are a very necessary part of your computer. However, you can lose your important files due to technical issues or hardware failures. To avoid losing your files, you should take a backup of your system as soon as possible. Backup files could be specific like a particular folder or complete like a computer backup. Windows 7 You can save all the files of your laptop/desktop to one or more folders by using the Windows "Backup and Restore" tool. To start the Windows Backup and Restore, go to the Start menu and select Settings > Backup and Restore. This tool is very simple to use. You can save all your files by selecting "Backup all my files and folders." Alternatively, you can choose to select the specific folders that you want to save. After that, you can set up your schedule when you want the backup files to be generated. Another way to manually back up your files is to use the "File History" feature. Windows 8 Windows 8 has three backup features: the built-in backup, disk space for the backup and the restore. To start the built-in backup, you must start the computer with the Windows 8 PC. When the screen appears, tap the power button at the bottom right of the screen, and the backup screen will be shown. You can set the method of your backup and schedule the backup. There is also an option to monitor and adjust the backup frequency. To save space for the backup, you can create space by formatting the external drives that you want to use for backup and restore. After that, you can set up the backups for your external drives. To do that, open the "Computer Management" and select the drive or partition. In the properties window, you can select the backup settings for "Start time," "Period," "Backup size" and "Backup type." "Period" is the time that your drive or partition will be backed up. "Backup size" is the maximum size of files and folders that will be saved. The last option is the type of backup. "Backup all" will include everything on your drive or partition. "Backup settings" will prevent the external drive from being mounted when the backup is running and will save everything on your drive. You should see your drive or partition during the backup procedure, but if you don b7e8fdf5c8
