The occurrence of anthrax, a severe and often fatal bacterial disease, has increased considerably during recent years. Apart from the development of an effective vaccine against this disease, other therapeutic agents are urgently needed. Here we describe the characterization of a bacterial protein (anthrax binding inhibitor) that binds to the growth-inhibiting factor neutralizing-peptide (GFN-P), and inhibits its activity. This anthrax binding inhibitor is a short peptide that is readily extracted from Abrus precatorius L. seeds. The present paper shows that this peptide is identical to a part of the omega-1 domain of the anthrax TcsA-protein, a member of a new family of cell division proteins. The amino acid sequences of the DNA-coding region of the A. precatorius cDNA that contains the omega-1 domain is reported.we have always been proud to be a signatory of the CELA (Confederation of the sectors threatened by the pitiless logic of the market) and fight as well as the CGA (Confederation of those sectors that believe they are threatened
