

All Our Asias is a surreal action-RPG set in a unique 2080 world. You must explore a vast land filled with strange characters and cities, and solve weird puzzles on your quest for the cure for a terminal disease that has ravaged the world. You will meet Yuito, a little boy who lost his mother due to the disease, and he will guide you throughout the journey! The game is a product of a mix of Japanese and American influences and features real Japanese voice acting in Japanese, English and French. The game also includes English, French and Spanish text translations. All the game's images are unique and designed specifically for the game with the artist Melos Han-Tani, the developer of All Our Asias. This fan pack features the full package: a large detailed book containing over 150 pages of commentary on the game's artwork, story, music and level design. There are also many of his original game sketches and early game concepts. The book is in Japanese but you can play the game in English! This book will provide you with more information and inspiration than the main game itself! A separate piece of music is included in the pack, and 10+ unused tracks from the main soundtrack as well. Access all the material by launching All Our Asias and clicking the Help Menu in the Steam client, where you will find the "Browse Local Files" button. That will take you directly to the game directory. Inside that folder you will find the All Our Asias Fan Pack as well as the OST in a separate folder! What's new:

Initiative A Drik Wastes Adventure The 5th street was quiet. The sun illuminated the gentle rustling of trees through the apartment that the occupants were renting. No human traffic to be found, just the occasional stomper crossing the street. Figuring that one of the other tenants was a human, he put out his hand, gesturing for the med-tech standing just inside the door to tend to the patient. While the med-tech was doing his job, the man slipped his hand under his cloak and pulled out an elven weapon. The barrel was hefty in the grip and well balanced in the centre. It was a rune gun, a new weapon of war. Many of the elves were already disillusioned over the negative aspects the rune gun, but the old ones believed it would end the growing conflict. That was how the man stood, holding his gun between the exit and the door to the apartment. The sun was beginning to set and now the runes on the doors began to glow. The man waited patiently, up-timing his weapon. His eyes narrowed at the water, waiting for the water to rise as the sun went down. Once inside the apartment, and after the door was locked, the med-tech shuddered and spoke. "The elf was pretty messed up..." the med-tech stated bluntly. The elf, whom they called Tyral, was sitting on the floor and he wasn't getting up or responding, but word that he was awake stirred the med-tech. "Come on, doc, you can leave now," the med-tech chided with a sigh. Tyral was a nobleman in exile. He fought off the invaders when they first came here and had been waiting for the army to return to help him when the war started up again. Now he was waiting in this apartment for the army he knew would never come back again. Some of the wounds on Tyral's body were still patched up but the ones that hadn't been could be seen now. His face was bloodied, cut across his brow, and the side of his face. Tylor had already lost so much blood that it didn't seem to be able to clot properly and his skin was tinged with purple. The last time the med-tech had seen Tyral so badly beaten he had been
