Georgij Nazarov - Zdravlje bez kompromisa.pdf E-books Store. Episode 3 Common Core Poetry. The use of prose is not restricted to narrative or informative genres. It can also be used in.Crawford Avenue station The Crawford Avenue station is a SEPTA Regional Rail station in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Located at 3500 N. 9th Street, this station serves Amtrak’s Northeast Regional service as well as SEPTA’s R8: City Circle Regional (Airport Line) rapid transit line and SEPTA’s R2: Fox Chase/Newtown Line regional trolley line. Located in Southwest Philadelphia, this station was the first to be named and opened. It is the thirteenth station southbound along the Northeast Corridor line. History Crawford Avenue is the first station of the SEPTA subway elevated line. The first station southbound on the line was, and the next station to the north was, a Washington Avenue station. The station's original name was "Crawford", spelled as such without an apostrophe. During the 1960s, the SEPTA program Route 8, which was to provide commuter service from King of Prussia, Pennsylvania and Linden, New Jersey, ran past this station. Trains would originate here, bound for Washington, D.C. and New York City. Crawford Avenue station was also the first to have a direct connection to the subway line. As the construction of the subway line was being planned, the Philadelphia Transportation Company (PTC) arranged a legal contract with the New York Tunnel and Bridge Company (NYT&B) for the construction of the subway. Under the contract, PTC could buy land, tunnel, and stations from NYT&B. The transfer to the subway tunnel was located under Crawford Avenue, and the subway tunnel ran beneath U.S. Route 30 and the Northwest Rail Line (which crossed CSX's Main Line Subdivision rail line). After the opening of the subway, the line became SEPTA's route 8 and became known as the Philadelphia-New York route. In 1967, SEPTA began to plan the Fox Chase Line from downtown Philadelphia to the Fox Chase area, and construction started in the Spring of 1968. The station was the terminus for the Fox Chase Line from January to May 1968. The station opened officially on June 29, 1968 as the last station of the Fox Chase Line until its extension
