Q: Why no way to get host IP with socket.gethostbyname When I want to get IP of host, I usually use this way (in python): >>> print socket.gethostbyname("www.yahoo.com") Why this doesn't work? I get error with return data: >>> print socket.gethostbyname("www.yahoo.com") Traceback (most recent call last): File "", line 1, in socket.gaierror: [Errno -2] Name or service not known A: You can use urlparse.urljoin() for this purpose. >>> import urlparse >>> urlparse.urljoin("", "www.yahoo.com") '' >>> A: The result of gethostbyname() will be a list of IP addresses in a tuple that will be returned to you. If you just want a single IP, you'll have to iterate over the list and fetch each IP address in turn. Here's an example: import socket print socket.gethostbyname("www.google.com") import ipaddress for ip in socket.gethostbyname("www.google.com"): ipaddress.ip_address(ip) You get the following result: (1.1.1.1) (2.2.2.2) (2.2.2.3) (2.2.2.4) (2.2.2.5) (2.2.2.6) (2.2.2.7) (2.2.2.8) (2.2.2.9) (2.2.2.10) (2.2.2.11) (2.2.2.12) (2.2.2.13) (2.2.2.14) (2.2.2.15) (2.2.2.16) (2.2.2.17) (2.2.2.18) (2.2.2.19) (2.2.2.

Ask HN: How important is the language you write a program in? - ivarv I'm a front end developer, and I'm developing a new hobby project using Javascript. At this point I'm not looking for a specific technology or framework, but I'm wondering if it matters to me what language I use? I'm working on something that probably won't have much interest in the future, and maybe just end up being a way to learn new tech. ===== greenyoda I find the choice of programming language to be much less important than the choice of libraries and the tools you use to develop your program. Using a language that's really easy to learn and which has good libraries for common operations and large, powerful frameworks for developing web applications is a plus, but not absolutely necessary. Also, you can often use other people's libraries for your application. If there's a widely-used and well-maintained library that does something sophisticated that you want to use, you don't need to rewrite it from scratch. Q: Installing Bash 4.1 on Ubuntu 16.04 LTS (Ayurveda) I am using a new version of Ubuntu (Ayurved
