GT 8310V DL.Q: Convert 2d matrix to 3d array I have a 2d matrix [[1,2,3],[4,5,6],[7,8,9]] and I want to convert it into an array with size 3x3x3. Can anyone tell me how to do this in Python? A: You can use numpy.mgrid to expand it: import numpy as np result = np.zeros((3,3,3)) for i, row in enumerate(matrix): for j, col in enumerate(row): result[i, j] = row[col] This works for a matrix of any shape, but at least 2D. "You might as well stick a toothpick in your eye as waste your time with this movie." -The Onion You're not the only one. The world at large is taking notice, too, and while I'm not a "hater" per se, I found a multitude of problems with this post-apocalyptic, zombie-themed flick. The first problem is that this movie is not about zombies. It's about the human condition. It's about how we react and cope in times of crisis. It's about the forces at work when one must improvise the rules of engagement every day. It's about how even when you feel like your society has been compromised, you can still keep your humanity through the chaos of "every man for himself." It's about a defiant and persevering group of survivalists. It's about a group of friends who bond and learn to work together. It's about loss and forgiveness. It's about hope. It
