This game is a variation of a classic game invented by Lee Patterson and originally introduced in 1977 as Mall Sweep. Game play is relatively simple. You shuffle the cards, then deal out 5 rows of 12 stores each. The object is to be the last player to get rid of her hand by empty all of the stores in one of the three rows of 12. As you conquer stores you collect a small reward from the opponent and scores one point for every store in her row. The player with the most points wins and is declared the "Super Megastore"! The winner may be waiting to play again - he/she simply needs to sign up for a new game! In this way this game is parent directory ready.

by Sara Henreides When I saw that the floor at Ultima was covered in plastic, periwinkle plastic, I gasped. As the owner of all kinds of kitschy British toys, I would think that the National Trust's country HQ would have something more edgy for me. But maybe the lady in charge didn't realize that plasticine is the stuff from which so many human worlds have begun, worlds playing out the ideals of conflict, survival, success, failure, or even death itself. "It's a little graveyard for your plastic," our new host said when she saw my raised eyebrows. Ultima's an interesting building, way back when, mesmerizing for the imagination. The stone exterior is barely visible as I follow my host to one of the interactive stations on the top floor. She takes a moment to explain the display's significance to a pair of fellow tourists. I'm surprised that plasticine has such a long history. "It's the oldest mass-manufactured plastic that exists," my host explains. "It was invented in Russia in 1832." "U-R-R?" I ask. "The Russian Imperial College." "It's a combination of ground up clay and a thermostat," she adds. "The Russian what?" "Thermostat, sorry." "A thermometer? A thermometer!" At the time of my Great-Uncle David's death, the first patent for this new product was taken out. Several years after the classic James & Sons was founded. That sort of pace! But Times change, and there are different kinds of plastic. I'm thinking of the European plastic "gastrotrich" worms, which originally developed in 1938. About a decade later, there was the Swiss plastic playgoat, which was shaped as a donkey. Born in Sweden in 1951, plasticine came with activity kits for all kinds of invention. It's essentially plastic sand, like in Modoc, but since it stays put, your child can sculpt a much denser block. "It's the great escape for us adults,

Lost in Vivo is an adventure game in which two people live in a strange world and try to solve a puzzle. These puzzles are described by a series of images that are hidden in the game. To solve these puzzles, you will need to speak to or have interaction with another character, who is called a "Sitter." Sitters can give clues to the player, and they may even come across a clue, themselves. The sound effects were created with the help of Craig Sims. The characters and environments in the game were created with the help of Ashley. If you have any further questions please contact me. There was a problem importing this song. Please try resetting the session. If the problem persists, delete all the content under [DATA/] and then re-add the song using the import screen. Lost in Vivo is a fun and unique puzzle experience that puts you in the shoes of two people, Maria and Joshua, who find themselves in a strange world after a car accident. The game is played through everyday objects (mouthwash, coins, etc) that play a special part in the story. There's a lot going on under the hood of the story, but the characters are fun and the gameplay is engaging and sometimes frustrating as they struggle to find the puzzle solution. After completing the game, each person can choose their own ending by meeting in person with the fellow player character at the end of the game. There are four endings to the game as the environment and characters change depending on which ending is chosen. Lost in Vivo was successfully funded on Kickstarter in 2012 and has been played by gamers around the world ever since. This OST contains 64 original songs in.mp3 format. The music is divided into two sections: 1) Background Music/Melodies: music throughout the game, regardless of location or environment. These songs are generally slower in style and are meant to be background music for the player's interaction with the game world. 2) Impact Scenes: The Impact Scene is a collection of tracks that directly correspond with the locations of various puzzles that have to be solved by the player. The character's interaction with this puzzle is accompanied by a different style of music. Features: • Chronological Storytelling The game tells the story of the characters in a completely new way. Narrated by Maria, the game starts at the very end of
