formation in 2-D metal chalcogenide films grown on air-exposed oxides. High-resolution transmission electron microscopy investigations of post-sputtering grown 2-dimensional (2D) metal chalcogenide films (001)Te/MoS₂/WSe₂ and (001)MoS₂/WSe₂ heterostructures reveal very flat and smooth interfaces between the metal chalcogenide and the chalcogenide films due to the absence of species on the air-exposed surface of the oxide. The results show the evidence that the post-sputtering growth of the molybdenum disulfide (MoS₂) and tungsten diselenide (WSe₂) films on air-exposed [0001] oxide surfaces results in the formation of a high density of metal to chalcogenide heterojunctions, which are characterized by the abrupt transition between the metal nanocrystals and the chalcogenide film due to the high reactive nature of the oxide surface.Fish matters: developing the nursing ethic. Following in the tradition of the great nursing theorists, nurses' moral responsibility has been of central importance to the development of the nursing profession. Among the current theorists, H. Gaensslen (1942) and M. Bowlby (1953) have proposed that responsibility concerns the developing relationship between nurse and patient. Responsibility is thus used to define a nurse's duty to a given patient. However, both theorists limit the parameters of the patient-nurse relationship to that of the relationship between
