The digital box, called T.V.Box, allows users to pick up episodes of Top Gear from a selection of channels on the live TV streaming service, as well as show information and reviews. That's where T.V.Box comes in. The developer, who goes by the username "silatgame," has created his own Xbox Live account, complete with PSN and Steam accounts and a profile. All he's missing is a controller. Silatgame bought a brand new Xbox One S console with the system's launch, but the console is not much use without a controller. So he made an Xbox Live app that will allow him to play Xbox games on his T.V. Box. The app does not yet feature a controller function, but it's still in the works. When T.V.Box has a controller, it's capable of playing games, watching TV shows, and browsing content in the Xbox Store. "A big shoutout to Microsoft for making an app that can run Xbox games on a device without having a game controller," said Silatgame. "It only works on certain games. I've only tested it on Forza Horizon 3, Rainbow Six Siege, and Gears of War 4. You can also play Xbox Store games on it (looks like 2K has T.V. Box Games on there). You can load up a fullscreen image and you can drag it around on the small screen. It works perfectly in this scenario." Silatgame has described the app as "a proof of concept. The SDK is open source, you can view it here. Still a very early stage

The agreements were announced by Justice Department officials in a news conference. In April, the department signaled its commitment to prosecuting illegal gambling and money laundering in Western states. The agreements are similar to a pair of $17 million settlement agreements reached with lawmakers on both sides of the aisle in May 2009. "We're very pleased to work with both New Mexico leaders on this matter," said Assistant Attorney General Ronald Welch. The new agreements cover four settlement agreements that were negotiated between the Justice Department, New Mexico lawmakers and four casino gaming companies. The New Mexico State Police claim that casino gaming companies, such as the Mennonite Church-sponsored casinos in Farmington and Hondo, received improper payments from gamblers in violation of New Mexico state gaming law and the state's Unlawful Internet Gambling Act. Those laws prohibit companies that accept wagers from accepting payments from gamblers who use illegal offshore Internet gambling sites. The multi-million-dollar settlements required the casino companies to pay $20 million to the state and a $2 million cash bonus to the state police. The other agreements require the casino gaming companies to pay $120 million to the state and another $120 million to the state police. All of those payments are to be made over several years. The new agreements will require the casino companies to provide an additional $10 million to the state and another $5 million to the state police. The casino gaming companies—which include competitors throughout the West—are owned by the Church-run Mennonite Church USA, the Howard R. Hughes Corporation, Penn National Gaming and SunCruz Casinos. Mennonite Church USA, which owns two horse racing and gaming facilities in New Mexico, will pay for the construction of the welcome center. The state's Human Services Department will oversee the project.ARCHIVE MORE A State's Greatest Treasure One of the highlights of this year's Kansas State Fair was the visit of Terry Filz, f b7e8fdf5c8

What's New In?

-- ETextViewer is a straightforward and user-friendly application that comes in handy for those who want a simple yet comprehensive tool to create, edit and store text files or books, as well as bookmark the most important ones at a click away. It's wrapped in a clear-cut and tidy with a word editor and a toolbar that provides the most commonly used functions for faster access. The app features a bookmark system, opens large files and saves the cursor position for each document after it's closed. Manage newly opened notes and favorite valuable ones To make a new document you can either start typing or copying content from another source or open an existing item from the computer. Unfortunately, it only supports plain text files. The bookshelf function lets you view all the recently opened records, similar to the clipboard manager, which is cleared after a limited numbers of entries. The bookmark comes in handy if there are more than one document for which you need to remember where you left off, as they save the cursor location value. There are up to five bookmarks you can use. Plus, the tool offers an option to scroll a specific number of lines and a delay time. Customize the layout and content and look up for terms You can search for particular words, save the current preferences, hide the toolbar, as well as change the background and frame colors. From the menu, the app lets you set the page margins, customize the font type, style, size and tint, and increase and decrease the font, useful for those with poor eyesight. However, the basic interface doesn't provide functions to insert images, symbols, date and time, along with word alignment, bullet lists handy to quickly organize items, and highlight to easily find terms. Also, it would've been nice if the tool offered a save function, so you can open them in other programs after they are edited. Conclusion All in all, EtextViewer is an accessible and intuitive application designed to create, edit and store documents with various purposes, manage them in a bookshelf and add important ones in bookmarks. During our testing, it didn't consume too many resources nor encountered errors. ETextViewer Screenshots: --
