Among the genetic products that affect cellular differentiation are the transforming growth factors beta (TGF- β). TGF- β causes a change in cell state that is either embryonic or mesenchymal in nature. When secreted by mesenchymal cells, TGF- β induces the expression of genes that are characteristic of epithelial cells. Alternatively, TGF- β is produced by cancer cells and acts to prevent the differentiation of such cells. Thus TGF- β may stimulate or prevent the formation of tumors. In recent years, as the advance of the semiconductor manufacturing technology, the quantity of the semiconductor product to be manufactured at one time is increasing. In view of the progress in the degree of integration and complexity of semiconductor products, the standard of the wafer formation has been progressing toward a level requiring higher precision and higher dimensional accuracy. An example of the configuration of a semiconductor chip is illustrated in FIG. 8. In FIG. 8, reference numeral 101 denotes a semiconductor substrate; and reference numerals 102 and 103 denote gate electrodes. A silicon oxide film (not illustrated in the figure) is provided between the gate electrodes 102 and 103. In the semiconductor substrate 101, an active region 105 and a non-active region 106 are formed. The active region 105 includes a main surface along which the gate electrodes 102 and 103 are to be arranged, and which is a portion containing a plurality of MOS transistors that constitute a functional circuit (not illustrated) of the chip. The non-active region 106 is a portion where a CMOS transistor is not provided. The non-active region 106 is provided between the active regions 105 of two adjacent MOS transistors. The non-active region 106 of the channel stop MOS transistor is formed deeper than the active region 105 of the MOS transistor. Reference numeral 107 denotes a trench
