When it comes to China's loose use of the death penalty, there's a big difference between places like Xinjiang and Tibet. Sixty years ago, what would today be thought of as Tibet was a fairly autonomous region run by Tibetans, and the Tibetan government enforced a stringent system of self-control. The Dalai Lama, a spiritual leader, wasn't forced into exile, and only a tiny handful of Tibetans were hanged to death. So we're guessing the Chinese have high hopes of Tibet's new reincarnation, Lobsang Sangay (pictured above), when he takes over the role this week. He was born in China, and according to the New York Times, he's "exactly" the kind of person the government wants for the job: Growing up in exile, Lobsang Sangay studied the arts. He is said to speak five languages and write numerous poems. He has a doctorate in Tibetan history and is a Buddhist. He believes strongly in keeping the Tibetan cause alive and working toward greater autonomy for his homeland. [...] His ties to the Dalai Lama are minimal. He has never met the man in person. The Times also reported that Sangay "has no desire to run for office" and "does not expect to hold any political office."The bax gene cluster is not required for flagellar function in Nod mutants of Sinorhizobium meliloti. In nitrogen-fixing, free-living, and symbiotic Sinorhizobium meliloti, mutants lacking the bax gene are defective in host-cell-associated and intercellular motility and fixed-cell chemotaxis, but not in nodule invasion. Mutant and complement strains expressing a functional bax were constructed, and motility phenotypes and cell-adhesion abilities were measured in vitro. Motility was reduced in all bax-gene mutants by about 30%,

The user terminal displays the key on a display. The user terminal receives a random number from the user and transmits the random number to the authentication server. The authentication server extracts a key based on the random number and the key that is notified by the authentication server to authenticate the user. In a conventional system that is disclosed in PTL 2, a user terminal transmits a random number to an authentication server. The authentication server detects whether the random number is a noise value or a pseudorandom number based on a ratio between the received random number and the random number stored in advance. In the conventional system that is disclosed in PTL 2, it is determined whether the random number is the pseudorandom number or the noise value based on the detected ratio. In a conventional system that is disclosed in PTL 3, a user terminal randomly selects a random number from a random number source and transmits the random number to an authentication server. The authentication server determines whether the random number that is transmitted from the user terminal is the random number that is generated by the random number source. In the conventional system that is disclosed in PTL 3, the authentication server determines whether the random number that is generated by the random number source is transmitted from the user 6d1f23a050
