Everyday Practical Electronics Full Year 2012 Collection.rarBy Paul Cruickshank TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (Reuters) - A U.S. Army private suspected of using a handgun to kill three people and wound two others at a military facility in central Alabama will go on trial later this year, a military judge announced on Tuesday. Private First Class Noe Hernandez faces four charges, including two counts of premeditated murder, in the March 4 shootings at the U.S. Army's Army Combat Readiness Center in Redstone Arsenal, Alabama. Hernandez was captured a day after the shootings. Six other soldiers were charged in connection with the shooting but the U.S. Justice Department recently decided not to prosecute them. They will be tried, along with Hernandez, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, the military's only U.S. military court, but in much smaller, quicker trials. A pretrial hearing was scheduled for Wednesday but was postponed until April 10. The three civilian victims were identified on Tuesday as a man and two women. They were named as Army National Guardsmen Matthew Burnett, a 31-year-old munitions specialist, and his wife, Megan Burnett, a 28-year-old nurse; and Taylorsville resident Kayla Cuevas, 19. Megan Burnett, a high school graduate, had just given birth to the couple's first child less than a month before the shootings, according to their Facebook profile. Hernandez's lawyer did not immediately respond to an email seeking comment on Tuesday. The victims were killed in a car park in the military facility that houses weapons testing, according to U.S. military officials. The shootings triggered a massive manhunt by hundreds of U.S. and Alabama law enforcement and military officers. Hernandez had been previously deployed to Afghanistan and was dishonorably discharged from the Army in 2011, the military said at the time. Hernandez, who
