Find out what happens when bullets.Q: Can't get program to automatically execute For practice, I made a program to type the word "AI" as many times as possible in five seconds, and I want it to automatically execute and show me what it was before each word was typed. Here is the code: import sys import time print('--------'); start = time.time() print('This program will automatically type the word "AI" as many times as possible for five seconds.'); print('Insert "AI" at the start of the words in your sentence below and hit enter.'); sentence = input('>>> '); while time.time()-start >> ') break print(sentence) When I press "start", it tells me "break" has no attribute. Why? A: The code looks a little weird. Here is a cleaned-up version with indents and comments: import sys import time print('--------') start = time.time() print('This program will automatically type the word "AI" as many times as possible for five seconds.') print('Insert "AI" at the start of the words in your sentence below and hit enter.') sentence = input('>>> ') # This loop will break out while time.time() - start >> ') # This loop will continue as long as "ai" is not found while True:
