EasyWorship 2009 Video Codecs Antithrombin deficiency increases the risk of a post-operative neurological event in neurosurgical patients: a retrospective, matched, case control study. Antithrombin (AT) deficiency is an acquired condition that predisposes to venous thromboembolism and causes potentially fatal post-operative complications. However, the risk of neurological complications in AT deficiency, such as stroke and transient ischaemic attack (TIA), after neurosurgical procedures is unknown. We retrospectively identified and compared clinical and radiological data of AT deficiency patients who had undergone a neurosurgical procedure in our centre, with a control group of neurosurgical patients with normal AT levels, matched for age and gender. We also compared the rate of post-operative neurological events at 3 months follow-up. A total of 11 patients were identified with AT deficiency. Patients had received lower doses of AT replacement therapy (65% 50-75% of normal AT values) than control patients (44% 65-100% of normal AT values). Ten patients (91%) presented with a neurological event. The rate of neurological complications was significantly higher in patients with AT deficiency (50%) compared to patients with normal AT levels (9.7%), but was highest in the AT group that received the lowest dose of AT replacement. After an adjustment for differences in indication for neurosurgical procedures, AT replacement therapy, age, and sex, AT deficiency was independently associated with a higher rate of neurological events (odds ratio: 11.52, 95% confidence interval: 1.6-83.8). In patients receiving AT replacement therapy, the rate of neurological complications remained significantly higher (odds ratio: 15.45, 95% confidence interval: 2.36-101.7) after adjustment. AT deficiency in patients undergoing neurosurgical procedures might be a risk factor for the development of neurological complications post-operatively. Low AT replacement therapy doses might augment the risk of post-operative neurological complications.

Q: Nested loop misunderstanding I've got really basic misunderstanding in a nested loop, could someone please help me to figure out why does this code not work like it should, instead of shifting the data one position it shifts to the next position of the array
