Involvement of the TEF-1 family of transcription factors in the autoregulatory loop of the rpoS-lacZ fusion in Escherichia coli. The rpoS (sigma 32) gene product is a stress-inducible sigma factor in Escherichia coli. Expression of the rpoS gene is tightly controlled by autoregulatory mechanisms. Upon entry into stationary phase and upon addition of non-lethal concentrations of UV light and/or Mg²⁺, a positive regulatory element is autoregulated by a negative element in the rpoS promoter. In this study, we identified two transcription factors, GreA and Gaa, as binding partners of the rpoS-lacZ promoter fusion. Both factors were purified and shown to bind to the rpoS promoter in vitro. Overexpression of either factor in vivo increased transcription of the rpoS-lacZ fusion. In addition, addition of Mg²⁺ greatly decreased the in vivo activity of both GreA and Gaa. Furthermore, deletion mutagenesis of the rpoS promoter upstream region revealed that the minimal region for GreA and Gaa binding was a GC-rich fragment containing rpoS promoter nucleotides -110 to -38. Taken together, these results identify, and provide biochemical characterization of, two regulators involved in the autoregulatory loop of rpoS. Emotion-focused coping in adults with ADHD: characteristics of emotion regulation and emotion-cognition interplay. This study examined emotion-focused coping (EFC) in adults with ADHD. It was hypothesized that EFC is a relatively dysfunctional coping style in this group. Furthermore, it was investigated whether EFC was related to emotion-regulation abilities. Eighty-two outpatients with ADHD were compared to 82 healthy controls on the Emotion Regulation Skills Questionnaire and the Inventory of Coping With Emotional Distress. Emotional experiential avoidance was more prevalent in ADHD patients than in healthy controls. In addition, a higher number of types of emotion-focused coping was reported by ADHD subjects than by controls. Furthermore, the number of types of emotion-focused coping correlated significantly with ADHD inattention. Finally, the processing style of positive c6a93da74d
