As used herein, video surveillance refers to the collection of video or imagery data for the purpose of image analysis, information retrieval, or video or imagery security. Video cameras are commonly used for security and surveillance purposes. For example, video cameras, such as Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) cameras, are commonly used in "intrusion alert" systems to monitor access control areas, power plants, and other buildings. Such cameras are also used to monitor specific areas of airports and high traffic areas. An intrusion alert is a procedure for detecting unauthorized activities. For example, intrusion alerts may be employed to monitor airport terminals and other areas to prevent unauthorized access to restricted areas and to provide early warning of criminal activity. The images captured by the intrusion alert system can be used to conduct further investigation, such as identifying the perpetrators of any violations c6a93da74d
