My former supervisor told me I was a source of inspiration to him one day last week. Actually, I'd like to think he meant that not only was I working to provide a healthier lifestyle for my family, but also I was providing inspiration and advice to others on the path to a fitter and healthier lifestyle. However, there are times when we hear the words "inspire" and "inspiration" that we think we are doing others a big favour by providing ideas, advice, inspiration and motivation. I think this was the case for him. He told me that he finds it somewhat inspirational to hear how someone, somewhere, is trying to build a healthier, happier family and there's light on the horizon. This is something I'm thinking about, too. I'm considering that maybe I'm more of an inspiration to someone, somewhere, than I am to me. What do you think? When I speak with clients, one of the things I want to share with them is that the road to health is a journey for them, too. I want to remind them that, when it comes to being a healthy person, there is much more to it than just what you are doing to make changes to your life.
